THE 90'S JOURNAL

Being a 90s kid brought back so many memories. One of my favorites were all the weird candy experiments. It was a major reason why our parents used to fight with us in the night trying to get us to brush our teeth.

From candy rings that says I do and sour candy that will burst your taste buds because it's cool, we had everything! Jawbreakers were my everything. It's entirely impossible to finish it in one day. If it falls, it never breaks. The colorful eruption inside for Christ sakes!

Weekdays were all about learning and problem solving. If you had basic tv, then PBS kids was the ultimate go to. The kids of luxury probably were introduced to Nickelodeon.

But there is nothing better than waking up on Saturday mornings. The competition was at its all time high. If you had siblings, you guys probably had to fight between watching Fox Kids, Disney/ABC7, PIX 11, and Cartoon Network. What a major headache!

Learning was a true fundamental and so was being a major gamer. Software developers created so many games to allow us to be super smart in school while being competitively brilliant. Not to mention the one-button challenge of tossing water rings? You're better off solving a Rubix cube.

Other than hand-helds and electronical systems, we were great with telling the future. Pick a number, pick a color, choose your destiny! We even grew a passion of keeping collectables. Pokemon cards and Hitclips were my ultimate fave!

If you thought Thanksgiving brought your family closer, think again! Board games called for a whole, new level of “togetherness!” The intense passion of winning, losing, sharing laughs and the short burst of anger sums it all up.

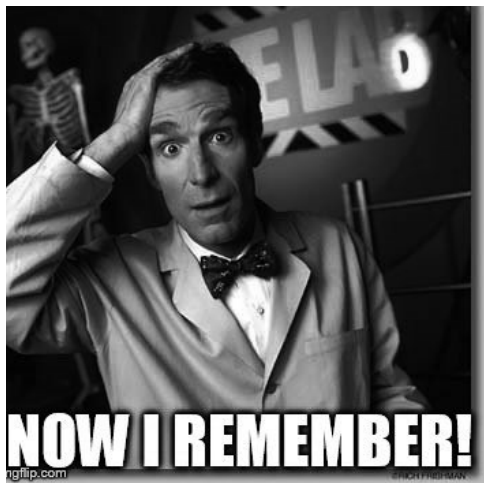

Those pathetic cards that destroys your faith of being a champion sucks! Not to mention that one sore loser at the table that quits when everyone is so far ahead, always seems to be your cousin. Wait until he or she tells your aunt later about you guys cheating.

Kids were so fashionable and bright. For any guys with sisters or girl-cousins, she probably dressed similar to you with the exception for the outrageous girliness.

While you wore your mini spiderman watch, she more likely wore her Cinderella version if she didn't choose to wear her snap bracelet. Who could forget those jumbo barrettes that always go missing, along with those stick on earrings that lasted for only 2 seconds. Jelly shoes for hot summers, bright mini mouse shirts with bright shades and denim skirts? Sounds familiar?

I shared my wonderful memories with you and I would like you to share some with me. What do you remember being a 90s kids?

I REMEMBER..
